THE MONSOON EFFECT: A HIGH-ENGAGEMENT SEASON WHERE MOOD, MEDIA, AND MARKETING MOVE IN SYNC

The Season That Draws Eyes to Screens

Monsoon creates a distinct shift in how people behave, consume, and engage. With more time spent indoors, there's a natural increase in screen time, content consumption, and digital interactions. For advertisers, this period opens up a focused window to deliver timely, emotion-driven messaging.

India’s average daily online time now stands at 6 hours and 49 minutes. During the monsoon, this number trends even higher as audiences turn to CTV, OTT platforms, and short-form content for entertainment. OTT platforms alone have reached 547 million users in India, with 35 million users accessing content via Connected TV. Nearly 23% of digital audiences today are digital.

This shift also influences purchase behavior. E-commerce platforms see more interest in categories like snacks, skincare, rainwear, and home essentials. A strong monsoon forecast is driving optimism in the FMCG sector, especially in rural markets, where growth is expected at 6–8%, with 12–13% revenue growth projected in the food segment.

Digital consumption is high, attention spans are sharper, and the emotional connect is stronger. For brands, this is a season to stay present, stay relevant, and show up in the moments that matter.

CTV BECOMES THE NEW FAMILY TV

Connected TV is becoming a monsoon essential for viewers and brands that want to land inside households with impact. As rain drives people indoors and toward shared content consumption, CTV offers the perfect blend of emotional connection and digital precision. Here’s why CTV is built for seasonal storytelling:

1. PRECISION THAT DELIVERS TO THE RIGHT HOMES

CTV enables brands to reach defined audience segments based on viewing behavior, household demographics, and location. For monsoon campaigns, this means delivering creative that’s timely and relevant to exactly the households that matter.

2. ENGAGEMENT THAT GOES BEYOND THE SKIP BUTTON

With non-skippable formats and cinematic, full-screen ads, CTV keeps viewers immersed. The lean-back, focused environment of the living room enhances attention, especially during long indoor hours of the monsoon.

3. REACH VIEWERS AT THE LOCAL CLOUD LEVEL

Need to reach households in Mumbai during a downpour or Bangalore before a storm? CTV’s location-based targeting lets brands go hyper-local, making every ad moment more relevant to local conditions and mood.

4. CAMPAIGNS YOU CAN MEASURE AND MOVE IN REAL TIME

CTV brings programmatic-level analytics to TV. Advertisers can track impressions, completion rates, and lift, and optimize campaigns while they’re live. With increased monsoon watch-time, this means smarter ad spends with actionable results.

BETWEEN THE SLOTS

- Why did the living room feel like a billboard during monsoon?
 Because CTV turned every couch into prime-time inventory.
- Why did the QR code go viral during the monsoon campaign?
 Because nothing says "impulse buy" like rain and free shipping.
- Why did the campaign brief carry rubber boots?
 Because it was wading through heavy engagement.

WEATHER-BASED APIS: THE SMARTEST FORMAT FOR SEASONAL CAMPAIGNS

When weather shifts, your ad should too, here’s how dynamic creatives powered by real-time APIs make it happen.

Real-Time Weather Integration

Campaigns shift instantly with changing weather. Just like in Rainy-verse, when downpours hit, Haier’s dryer ad activates, no manual toggles, just seamless contextual switch-ins.

Dynamic Temperature Display

Whether it’s a scorcher in Sunniverse or a foggy chill in Fogtown, live temperature overlays add a layer of immediacy. The ad speaks to exactly what the viewer is feeling: hot, cold, or soaked, making it more personal and persuasive.

Optimised for Engagement

Built for CTV, these ads don’t just play, they respond. VDO.AI enables dynamic visuals and weather triggers that activate the right creative at the right time. Think: heaters in the fog, ACs in the heat, dryers in the storm, each ad built to match mood and moment.

more about learning how to work with AI. It's about asking the right questions, guiding the tools with intent, and pushing the technology toward real, creative, and strategic value to get, be, and stay ahead of the curve.

At the same time, with great capability comes great responsibility. As AI becomes more autonomous, we need to ensure it reflects the values we want to stand by. That means being mindful of bias, championing representation, and holding on to the principles that build long-term trust. For younger, digital-native generations, this matters more than ever. These audiences are algorithm-aware. They crave authenticity and can tell when something feels off. That's why even AI-driven marketing needs to feel real, and that realism still comes from human insight.

AI can help us scale relevance. But relevance without empathy is just noise. It's our curiosity, intuition, and imagination that make a message meaningful. Those are the things no algorithm can replicate. The next wave of marketing won't be led by machines. It will be shaped by people who know how to work alongside them, people who understand that AI is a tool, not the story. And in a world increasingly run by systems, that human story is what will set brands apart.

Our digital magazine, Circles, has already stirred up conversations across the industry, with 200+ downloads and 10+ PR picks in just its first edition.
